Febrile Seizures-Types

Simple febrile seizure (all of the following) 70-75%

- Duration of less than 15 minutes
- Generalized
- No previous neurologic problems
- Occur once in 24 hours

Complex febrile seizure (any of the following) 20-25%

- More prolonged (> 15 min)
- Focal
- And/or recurs within 24 hr.

Febrile status epilepticus

- Febrile seizure lasting > 30 min.

Symptomatic febrile seizure 5%

- Age and fever are the same as for simple febrile seizure
- The child has a pre-existing neurologic abnormality or acute illness

Febrile Seizures-Pathophysiology

- The underlying pathophysiology is unknown.
- But genetic predisposition clearly contributes to the occurrence of this disorder.
- Although clear evidence exists for a genetic basis of febrile seizures, the mode of inheritance is unclear.
- While polygenic inheritance is likely, a small number of families are identified with an autosomal dominant pattern of inheritance of febrile seizures, leading to the description of a "febrile seizure susceptibility trait", with an autosomal dominant pattern of inheritance with reduced penetrance.

Mutations have been found in genes encoding the sodium channel and the gamma amino-butyric acid A receptor
